"Won't your honor give me two days in which to raise the fine?" asked the defendant. 'My wife is here now and she needs me, because she is sick. I am sober now, and if you will give me a chance I will pay the fine in two days."

His request was granted. Catherine Mahoney, a m Mahoney, a middle-aged woma who spends a large part of her time on the farm, was also in the procession. She was released from the farm early Saturday morning and she got $20 from some source. Before sundown she was in South Washington so much under the influence of liquor that she was un-able to tell whether she was at liberty or not. Catherine admitted her guilt, was arraigned and wanted time to pay her fine, but her credit

There is a feeling among newspaper men which tends toward a general exchange of courtesies and a desire to have some comfortable homelike place where they can meet together and enjoy one another's good society.

Washington has a more representative class of correspondents than any other city in the world, but until comparatively recently they have had no place of meeting.

Just two years ago the newspaper men of the city assembled and organized the National Capital Press Club. The beginning was a small Capital Press Club. The beginning was a sman one, but the success with which it has met was crowned on Saturday night by the second annual dinner of the club, given at the Arlington nual dinner of the club, given at the Arlington from the outside world. Mr. Ham Young and Robert J. Wynne alternated as the operators. nual dinner of the club, given at the Arlington Hotel. The committee having the dinner in charge undertook to arrange an affair which would surpass anything of the kind ever given. Time and labor were given to it, and the result went far beyond what the most expectant looked for. In novel effects, grandeur of decoration and unlooked-for surprises the history of the banquet hall does not chronicle a dinner that equaled it. The little attendants were of men entirely great the sword is not in it. they spent their time in making acquaintances and talking over the anticipations of the even-ing's enjoyments. Promptly at 8 o'clock President Wellman, with his guests, Col. Co bin and Senator Lindsay, on his arm, led the way into the banquet hall. As each one entered the room they gave expression to his admiration and surprise at the beauty of the decorations. The tables were arranged in the form of a double E, the members of the cabinet having the seats at the head. The tables were a mass of flowers, whose perfume filled the banquet ball with sweet scent. The walls were hidden with realing and expressions. palms and evergreens, among which were scattered thousands of small electric lights which shone as though the leaves had been sprinkled with precious gems. Directly back of the president was the inscription, "Press Club. Annual Dinner, 3-18-93," worked in electric lights. At the opposite side of the hall was a representation of a note book on which was thing?' also in electric display. The orchestra stand was covered with evergreens and in the center was a large branch of laurel mad with a star to indicate the place "Where we are at." On the top of this globe was a miniature of the Bartholdi statue about three inches high. The electric bulb in the goddess' hand was not over one-half inch in length, but with the 125 of them which were arranged on the table in front of each guest they gave out a brilliant light, the effect of which was novel and pretty. Though the electrical effects were admitted by all to be the grandest seen in a banquet hall, the fioral decorations were not less magnificent.

When the members and guests had taken the seats assigned to them President Wellman manipulated a button, which extinguished every sign of a light in the room, leaving it in pitchy blackness. As suddenly the lights were turned on again and the mounds at the five ends of the table had burst open and standing in each were two little children prettily dressed. In their hands were buskets of viole; boutonnieres, which they distributed to the guests. The effect was the standard of the control of the co fect was so startling and unexpected as to cause
